LEAD FROM WITHIN: 7 ACTS OF COURAGE FOR WOMEN LEADERS

Women make great leaders. We are good listeners, naturally perceptive, highly compassionate and wonderful bridge builders. Needless to say, women who reach the highest levels of power have proven themselves time and time again at being incredibly effective at influencing change and delivering results. However we also know that there are still far too few women sitting at the most senior decision making tables and that until there are more, not only will our organizations and institutions fail to benefit from the value women bring, but so too will the global web of communities they impact. WHY AREN'T MORE WOMEN RUNNING AMERICA'S SCHOOL DISTRICTS?

Women have made huge progress rising to executive positions in business, government and academia. However, less than 33% of the country's 500 largest districts have female superintendents, although most teachers are women, as The 74 reports.

Women continue to be passed over for leadership roles in education based on "questions about family responsibilities, stability and emotionality," some experts say. This doesn't just hurt women aspiring to leadership positions — it's also shrinking the educator pipeline, increasing turnover and, in turn, negatively impacting students and their families. WOMEN LEAD FOR LEARNING - INSIGHTS FROM THE 2025 GENDER REPORT

Although the global majority of teachers are women, the Gender Report of the 2025 Global Education Monitoring (GEM) Report, Women lead for learning, confirms that the "glass ceiling" still blocks women from top positions in education. The report also shows that when women do lead, they often drive inclusion, tackle barriers that hit girls hardest, support teacher development and foster collaboration. Continue reading...
